

A CHINESE FUNERAL DISTURBED BY A BOISTEROUS MOR.

Insults Patiently borne—A Crowd Snatching at the Candles Lighted for the Dead and Closing the Pursuing Demon's Path.

Wong Gong left the Celestial Kingdom, the home of his early youth, ten years ago to come to this new world. For seven years he was a laundryman in Pittsburgh, and for three years he plied his trade in Brooklyn. He came to New York from Brooklyn in a carriage so weak from a wasting consumption, of which so many of his race die, that he had to be carried by his friends into the basement laundry at 74 Oliver Street, where he was carried out on Monday in a shrouded coffin and taken away for burial. He died on Sunday afternoon, not about 26 years old.

The body lay in the front room of the laundry, behind light candle curtains, upon a lounge. Small colored candles burned at the head and feet with just enough flickering light to be seen through the thin curtains. The room was dark and dirty and full of Chinamen. The friends of the late Wong Gong sat moodily about upon the ironing table or upon stools and broken chairs. They smoked bad cigars, and occasionally one of them went out and returned with a paper of cigarettes. They kept their hats on, but sat listlessly, waiting for some body, and occasionally chattering in low voices. The usual work of the laundry was suspended for the day. Once a small boy interrupted the silence by crying and having them to be washed in the laundry, and leaving them to be washed.

Over the doorway was the name of Yuen Long. He was the original proprietor of the shop, but is now dead. His widow, Mrs. Yuen, runs the dozen firms since he sold out the business at that stand. Wong Gong went there to die because the late proprietor was his friend.

Two youths, the Verve and Neptune, were found able to beat her, and she came over to this country to see what she can do. It is to be seen that already beaten a fast American can sleep in Scotland.

She will be taken over to Staten Island and rigged within a week. She is under the control of Capt. Blatch of the New York Yacht Club.
